The Annual Payroll Game Changer Conference

What's the conference all about?

We all know that paying people on time and accurately is the key to delivering payroll, but payroll can be about so much more than that!

In February 2015 we ran the inaugural Payroll Game Changer Conference. People outside of payroll may think all we do is push a magic button, but we wanted to provide a conference for those who want to move to being a business partner with their business, and who want to grow their payroll career and find ways to deliver payroll differently.

We had a fantastic response to the first conference and in 2016 we looked at the changes we are seeing in payroll as a result of the introduction of Workday, smaller companies being bought by large international organisations, the threat of outsourcing still looming and the greater need for compliance.

In 2017 we want to give you new ideas on how you create payroll efficiency and ensure you are meeting compliance standards. We will show you different ways to grow your skills and experience to be a Payroll Business Partner, as well as case studies, tools and techniques of how payroll can be delivered differently. If you want to change the game in how payroll is viewed and get some out of the box thinking - then we'd love to see you there!

What will you get from attending?

At the end of the conference you'll have the following:

- Different ideas on how to grow you and your team's payroll skills and experience - and how payroll can be better recognised as a profession.
- Real answers on how to deal with curly and complex Holidays Act issues.
- Tools and techniques on how you can manage your payroll more efficiently, influence and deliver more to be a business partner.
- Meeting other Payroll Managers to discuss issues and share learnings with!

Places are limited... so book today!

Our 2016 panel - Gillian Service from Minter Ellison, Ruth Moody, Payroll Manager for Harvey Norman and Alan Reid, Labour Inspector | From 2015 Bobbie Hanlon & Melvyn Lucas from the Downer Payroll team.

Previous conferences:

What have previous attendees said?

I enjoyed the interactive nature of the conference, and I think the group size made a difference to this. Also great networking opportunities, I have already connected on Linked In with most of the participants.

I really enjoyed the whole experience, listening to all the different aspects of payroll that were on show was very interesting. The presentations were just the right length, particularly enjoyed the Leadership workshop.

Timing was perfect as not too long a day, speakers were great, actually a good size attendance, as too big you lose the atmosphere. Really enjoyed the opportunity to discuss payroll and talk to like minded payroll enthusiasts.

Enjoyed the discussion around curly issues we all face and the debate on where payroll should sit.

I really enjoyed the conference - I took a lot away of great value. I found it very interesting.

Probably one of the better conferences I have attended, thanks :)

A well worthwhile conference and I am sure more interest will be generated over the next 12 months.

DAY ONE Agenda

9am: Start

Morning sessions:

- Market Scan - what's happening with the payroll job market this year? How can you find good people for your team?
- Developing your skills to be a high impact Payroll Specialist - core techniques that can make a huge difference for your credibility and achievement.
- Using Lean Six Sigma principles to operate efficiently & get rid of paper!
- Case studies of payroll teams who have streamlined - what did they do, what's worked and what have they learned?

12.30pm - 1.15pm: Lunch

Afternoon sessions:

- Getting Agile - managing multiple timelines and processing so you have time to be strategic and proactive.
- Software Suppliers - what you should be asking them to do for you.

Articles from the conference blog:

Payroll is just pushing a button, right?

By Angela Atkins, after attending the first Payroll Game Changer Conference.

I had some trepidation about attending my first payroll conference. My passion is about transforming HR after all. But last year, when Anna Sefuiva joined the Elephant team, she convinced me that payroll wants to transform too. That payroll wants to be recognised for the value it adds. That payroll wants to be a strategic business partner. And that if we ran a conference about this - there would be lots of payroll people who want to be part of it.

In the end we had 40 people attend. Not quite as many as hoped, but every change has to start with the innovators and early adopters - and bring the others on board. Change is scary for many and trying to transform HR has created an enormous split in those who want to keep doing what they are doing, and those that want to reinvent HR.

I'm pleased to say that I was absolutely blown away by the conference. I've worked with some great payroll people but I admit I was still thinking of payroll as mainly transactional. Even by mid-morning on Thursday my perceptions and assumptions were rapidly changing!

On Thursday evening I participated in the #nzlead discussion on Twitter. I made the comment that the payroll team at Coca-Cola do surveys to measure the value they add. How many HR teams do that? I instantly had replies from 3 forward thinking HR people who all said that payroll couldn't add value - they just processed pay.

I'm here to tell you - no, they don't!

I have a new found respect for what the game changers of payroll are trying to do.

I was really inspired by the presenters and the discussions with attendees. The 2 days for me really exploded the 'payroll just press a button' myth. I can now see how payroll can be business partners, can add value and how payroll can be a fantastic career.

How can payroll change the game?

Over the next few months I'm going to ask those that presented to write up what they spoke about in this blog. However to give you a flavour, here are some of the key things I took away about how payroll can change the game:

- Lisa Bell from Frontier Software talked about outsourcing vs insourcing and global trends. She said that to be strategic, payroll needed to focus on rightsourcing to resource their function the most effectively. I could see this applying to HR too.

- Angela Cameron from Consult Recruitment talked about building payroll talent pools. She questioned why payroll wasn't included in placement in grad programmes and how we need to start selecting for the industry - not on experience, but on the whole person.

- Cody Forde from Coca-Cola talked about making sure you develop yourself and your team first, then run sessions for your managers and measure the value that payroll adds. I loved his quote 'a manager who doesn't have a succession plan for their own role is putting the company at risk'.

- Leila O'Sullivan and Melvyn Lucas talked about how hard it is to get into payroll and the misconceptions out there. Both these issues need addressing if payroll is to be recognised as the specialist function it is.

- After lunch we talked curly payroll issues. Chris Hogg from LangtonHudsonButcher and Janine Cooksley from Westpac adeptly handed the myriad of questions and issues thrown at them & it was clear that the level of knowledge needed of employment and case law is immense.

From the conference blog:

- Eugene Harvey from HRIT and Chris Casanelia from BNZ talked metrics and HR technology. Payroll can add real value in both these areas by advising the business and utilising the next generation of technology tools.

- The payroll debate was fantastic with cases made for why payroll should sit in finance (Louise Peters from Downer talked about the function and personality style matching) or in HR (Pene Barton from Chorus got very passionate about what the Chorus HR & payroll teams have achieved together). But Susanne Carter from Fulton Hogan won the day with her arguments about payroll needing to be its own entity. In the discussion that followed, it was raised that in the 80's Personnel and Payroll were equal before Personnel reinvented itself as HR and became the juggernaut it is today. Why did payroll get left behind?

- Nikki Luli from Croxley shared how she works with her payroll advisor to provide business advice to the management team including payroll updates and lunch time sessions.

Our case studies cemented a lot of the ideas discussed about using information not data, planning what you want to achieve and partnering with the business to give broad range advice.

What next?

I suspect that many payroll and HR people out there still see payroll as a transactional button pressing department. Those that attended the conference are going to try to start discussions to change that and at Elephant we'll be working on ways to involve the HR community in this too.

Because let me tell you, payroll is much more than pushing a button!

From the conference blog:

Who's working in Payroll & what are they using?

As part of the Payroll Game Changer earlier this year, we ran a survey on who was working in payroll and what they were using. Here's what we found from the 19 organisations and 36 people who participated in the survey.

Where is payroll based?

63% of companies have their payroll team as part of HR. Yet we know from hundreds of discussions with payroll and HR people, that the two don't often work well together. This is a real shame as payroll have hoardes of data at their fingertips that could help HR with analytics, and often HR teams don't enjoy the number crunching which payroll do. In larger HR teams we're seeing that the HRIS function is a bridge between to two, and is creating new career paths!

Who is working in payroll?

We found that 92% of payroll people in the survey are women. We believe this is an even higher ratio than HR. There is a good spread of people across the ages, except younger people coming into payroll. Is it being discussed at university as a career choice? Are there other things that Payroll could do to attract people? One organisation advertises for Filing Clerks, then asks the person to have a go at payroll - effectively tricking them into it! Once we've changed the game in payroll, then this issue should stop and people will be keener to apply for payroll roles, rather than filing.

How long have you worked in payroll?

This was a fascinating answer, with 59% having worked in payroll more than 10 years, and 19% more than 5 years. No-one completing the survey had worked in payroll for less than 2 years, which reinforces no-one new is coming into the industry.

What qualification do you have?

30% have a university degree, 11% had a diploma and 60% had other qualifications. This was an area discussed at the conference as needing to be addressed so Payroll people have clear qualifications going forward. The good news is that the Association of People Professionals (www.appnz.org.nz) is going to be working on a Professional Associate and Chartered standards for HR, Payroll, L&D and Talent.

What payroll system do you use?

While cloud HR systems are on the increase, payroll people had concerns about security issues for having pay information in the cloud. 76% of the organisations completing the survey use an in house system, with only 8% using cloud systems. Of the systems used they were: 11 used Chris21, 8 used Payglobal, 5 SAP, 5 JDE, 3 Preceda, 2 used PeopleSoft and 2 used Datacom.

So what next?

The key issues from this is that payroll is not attracting newer or younger people and this needs to change. This may be linked to having some different qualifications and training available as well as more information on career paths. Some of the presenters at the Conference are now involved in the Association of People Professionals, and are working to change this! See more about that on the next page of this brochure.
